The following is Dr Wood's secount of his own experience with hashish. About his past 4 p. m. Sept. 28 I took need of the artract. No immediate symptoms were produced. About 7 p. m. a professional call was requested, and forgetting all about the henry. I went out and saw my patient. Whiles writing a prescription I became perfectly oblivious to surrounding objects, but went on writing without any check to or deviation from the ordinary series of mental acts connected with the process, at least that I am aware of.

When the recipe was finished I suddenly recollected where I was, and horting up saw my patient sitting quietly before me. The convection was presistille that I had set thus many injustes—perhaps hours—and directly the idea fastened itself that the hemp had commenced to act and thrown me into a transc like state of considerable duration, during which I had been stupidly atting before my wondering patient. I hashly accessed and apologized for remaining so long, but was assured I had only been a very faw immutes.

About 730 p. m. I returned home. I was by this time quite accited, and the feeling of hilanty rapidly increesed. The following is Dr Wood's second of

As Nr. Edward S. Seule, of Freeport, was recording to his Boose Monday evening, at 11.30 velocit, when mast his home he saw a man coming towards him, who en abserving Mr. Soule, commenced to ran. Mr. Soule becoming surploious ran after him, the fellow going over tences, around buildings, through yards and gardens, all the time having a gunny bag slung over his aboulder, filled with different latt cles, which must have welphed fully twenty-five pounds. The fellow was to hard peabed by Mr. Soule that he had to leave his sade and run further to escape being caught, and he succeeded in getting away. Mr. Soule was nearly exhausted by he long chase, but returned to the spot where the fellow had dropped the bag, which he took charge of. On examination the contests were shown to be as follows. One brown overcoat, two pairs of socks, one pair of congress boots, one new wool blanter, one gent's gold ring setting gove, one key ring and key, a treut line, hook and reid, a lot of old maps and books, a whetherone, a lot of buttons with a few other small articles, a small lipes beg containing a leather pouch in which was thirty-die dellars in allyer quarkers, halves and dellars, one small portmonale containing the same hook. OF HIS EXPERIENCE.

WANTED TO BE FUNDY.

I was desposed to laugh, to make come gestures. One very frequently recurring fancy was to imitate with the arms the metion of a fiddler and with my lips the tune he was supposed to be playing. There was nothing like wild deliram or crary hallucinations that I remember At no time had I any visions, or at least any that I can now call to mind, but a person who was with me at that time stated that I once raised my head and exclaimed. Oh, the mountainst the mountains! While I was performing the various antice alluded to II knew I was acting very feelishly, but could not control myself.

I think it was about 5 c'clock when I ing a.r. nownsend or his family. Hethen entered the houses of Mrs. Agnes Regers and Mr. George H. I think it was about 3 c'clock when I began to have a feeling of numbness in my limbs, also a sense of general uneasness and unrest and a fear lest I had taken an overdose. I now constantly walked about the house, my skin, to myself, was warm, in fact, my whole surface felt flushed; my mouth and throst were very dry. The curious sensations of my limbs increased, my legs felt as though they were waren pulmer beneath me. I remember feeling bem with my head and finding them, as I thought, at least, very firm—the muscles all in a state of tone contraction.

About § o'clock I began those marked "spellis"—periods when all connections seemed to be severed between the external world and myself. I might be said to have been unsunscious during these times, in so far as I was oblivious to all external objects, but on coming out of one at was not a blank, a more empty space, but rather a far as I was oblivious to all externat opjects, but on coming out of one it was not a blank, a more empty space, but rather a period of active but aimless life. I do not think there was any connected thought in them, they seemed simply wild reversely without any binding cord, each a merechaos of disjointed ideas. The mind seemed freed from all its ordinary laws of association, so the it it passed from idea to idea, as it were, perfectly at random.

COULDY I MEASURE TIME

The duration of these "spells" to me was very great, although they really lasted but from a few seconds to a minute pr two, indeed, I now entirely lost my power of measuring; time; seconds teemed hours, minutes seemed days, hours seemed for finite. Still I was perfectly consenous during the intermissions between the percojums. I would look at my watch and then after an hour or two, as I thought, would look again and find that scarcely five minness had elapsed. I would gaze at its fice in deep disgues, the minute hands seeming Cocasionally, when my mand was most lucid, there was in the sort of duplay action in regard to the duration of time. I would think to myself "It has been so would think to myself "It has been so long since a certain event"—anhour, for example—since the doctor came, and then reason would say: "No, at has only been a few mountes. Four thoughts or feelings are caused by the hemp". Nevertheless, I was unable to shake off the sense of the simest indefinite prolongation of time, sven for a manute. The paroxysms shready allined to were not accompanied with mustake solvention.

sular relaxation.

About a quarter before $\mathbf{G}$ o clock I was standing at the door suxuously watching for the doctor, and when the spells would come on I would remain standing, learning slightly, perhaps, against the doorway. After awhile I saw a man approaching whom I took to be the doctor. The sound of his steps told me he was walking very rapidly, and he was under a gas lamp not more than one fourth of a shunce distant, yet he appeared a vast diswhich I poticed an enggeration of di

My extremities now began to grow cold and I went into the couse. When I attempted to walk up stars it seemed as though their lower halves, were made of lead. * * I felt as though my only chance was to struggle against these paroxysms, that I must countantly arouse myself to an effort of will.

That effort was made with infinite toll and pain. I felt as if some oril sput had control of the whole of me except the will power and was in determined confict with that, the last citadel of my being. I have never experienced anything hits the fearful sense of almost hopeless anguish and utter wearness which was inpour inc. Once or twice drying a paroxysm I had what might be called nightmans sensation. I felt myself monthing upward, expending, disting, desolving into the wide confines of space, overwalmed by a hornble, rending, uniterable depair.

Clam and Labster Lard.

"How do you tell a good clam?" ejaculated the fish dealer. "Oh, squas him. If he comes right open again he is weary for sail water, and is not fresh in the ordinary sense of the word. Any live clam who is squeezed knows enough to shat his mrouth and keep it so. It is only worn out fool clams who open their shells again immediately. Freship day clams are mostly closed up, sayway. If makes a heap of difference whether the clam is fresh, though. You ought to know if you have stree eat it. I hat a clam their got homesick and hange his tougue out all day in the blackst. I'd rather ast rettem apples.
